To help those among us with Internet Explorer 7 and Mozilla Firefox, this utility is designed to be used from time to time to encrypt, decrypt and encode/decode the form entries for us. This software has only one way of working, and that is to use it to encrypt form entries using a single key, known as the 'keymacro'. The application offers a small utility window which allows you to enter that key and click 'Next'. There is no further interface or prompts that require you to enter your password, which means that you can use it without anyone noticing. After clicking the Next button, the software will start to generate the encryption key which will be entered later to be used as the key for your web forms. As you'll see later, this is the only way to use this particular utility, but it does not make it any less secure, since you are using only a single key to encrypt everything. How to use keymacro Utility: To use the keymacro utility, you'll have to download it from this page. Extract the downloaded file into a folder of your choice. The only requirement is that it will be called 'keymacro' as in the example picture below. After extracting, you'll have to move to the folder which contains this new software. Then, double-click on the exe file and follow the on-screen instructions. When it asks for the path to the file with the keymacro data, it is the same as in the example picture below. After clicking OK, the software will start to create the keymacro data. You'll be able to view the generated key in the window below. Click 'ok' to confirm the creation and you'll be able to use the 'keymacro' for a while. After using the application for a while, you'll be asked to create another keymacro. In the example picture below, I have already created two keys. The 'Key 1' is the key that I will use to encrypt my forms, but it is also the same one that I will use to decrypt forms as well. This means that if I leave the application to do its job, I can use it to decrypt my information. That's why I have created a keymacro with the same value as in the example picture below. As the name says, this keymacro will be used by the same software to encrypt 81e310abbf
